lower costs. Our organization feels indebted to you."—Mr. Louis B. Harris, Municipal Golf and Tennis Association, Wilmington, Del.

"It is pretty generally thought that the chairmanship of a greens committee is a thankless job, but after having been elected a life member of our club at the last annual meeting I am forced to believe that this is not true. I am naturally very proud of the honor, but my reason for mentioning it here is because I feel that the Green Section of the U. S. Golf Association is responsible for it. All I have done has been to bother the life out of you people, study THE BULLETIN closely, and endeavor to comply with what I so learned. I wish to thank you for your untiring assistance to us in the past year, and wish you much success for the ensuing season."—Mr. R. A. Young, Highland Golf Club, Indianapolis, Ind.

Some U. S. Golf Association Decisions on the Rules of Golf

Question.—In a two-ball mixed foursome, A and B (the men) and C and D (the women), A and C playing together and B and D playing together, it is C's shot from the tee. She tees her ball and swings, but does not strike the ball. A, not being satisfied with the way C had teed her ball, removed the ball from the tee and made a new tee, to suit his style of playing, on another part of the teeing ground. Had he the right to do this, or should he have driven the ball from the tee which C had made? In other words, after the ball had been put in play, had he the right to lift it?

Answer.—A ball is in play as soon as the player has made a stroke at a teeing ground, and it remains in play until holed out, except when lifted in accordance with the rules. Therefore, after C had struck at the ball it was in play and should not have been touched. The penalty for lifting the ball is two strokes in medal play and the loss of the hole in match play. (See rule 6.)

Question.—In match play, opponents A and B are both on the putting green on their first shot, A being about 25 feet away and B being about 10 feet away. A, without sending his caddy to the flag-stick, putts, and his ball strikes the flag-stick as it stands in the hole, bounces up, and drops in the hole. B protests that A should have removed the stick from the hole; A claims not. B then putts out, making a hole in three. Who wins the hole?

Answer.—In match play either player may have the flag removed at any time, and the fact that A hit the flag-stick and the ball dropped in the hole does not incur a penalty. B had the right to have the flag-stick removed if he had wanted to. (See rule 32.)

On the Special Importance of Good Fairway Near the Greens

Maynard M. Metcalfe, The Orchard Laboratory, Oberlin, Ohio

Some fortunate courses have nearly uniform condition of turf upon fairways and greens, but of most courses this can not be said. Turf of only moderate quality through the major part of the fairway is not a very serious disadvantage, but irregular turf just short of the greens is a serious disadvantage. It is here that most balls must land on the approach shots, and the turf should be so even and uniform, so free from cuppy spots, ant hills, mole runs, and worm casts, as to allow one to approach with predictable results. The high, deadstop ball landing on the green itself is not the only good approach shot in golf. It should be possible to use the pitch-and-run and also the run-up ball, except upon "island greens," from which a running shot is purposely excluded, and of this sort of green there should be not many examples in the eighteen holes.
