

hinder either club or ball. A rough of this character is a great asset to a course.

Golf is a sport and is for pleasure. A lost ball is an irritation; it is no part of the game, for it cannot be played; it's a hindrance to the match directly involved and probably to several following pairs. Lost balls are a source of income to the golf professional; but this is a fault, not a virtue. A great majority of the lost balls are lost because the rough has received insufficient attention.
