

and playing advantages because of the natural undulating surfaces of the ground and the beautiful views which are unfolded along the entire course. The physical comfort of players will also be cared for, as it is proposed to fit up as a club house an old dwelling house within the golf course area, by remodelling it so as to provide a reading and rest room, locker rooms, showers, and other conveniences which are now considered essential to the successful operation of athletic grounds. These will no doubt be appreciated by the patrons of this course. The opening of this latest addition to the public golf playing facilities of the National Capital is being looked forward to with the greatest interest by the lovers of the sport, and it is believed that the course will prove to be immensely popular.

Notes on Public Links Golf

The second annual Public Links Championship tournament was awarded to Washington, D. C., at a recent meeting of the Executive Committee of the United States Golf Association. The date will be announced later, but the plan is to hold it either just before or just after the Open Championship. The East Potomac Park course, where the event is to be held, is being increased to eighteen holes and will offer a most satisfactory test, while the pledged cooperation of the District Park Department insures a successful event.

The Public Links Section of the United States Golf Association for the year 1923 will be composed of 14 members, 3 of whom will constitute an executive committee, to handle all routine business. It seems probable that some method of limiting the number of entries for the 1923 Public Links Championship will be necessary and that sectional qualifying rounds will be adopted as the elimination process. It is most unfortunate that an 18-hole course can not accommodate more than 150 players under present conditions of playing this championship, as we would like to have all the public links golfers in the United States gather in Washington if it were possible,
