Golf Architecture

This issue of THE BULLETIN contains several contributions on golf architecture. The best interests of golf are more and more demanding of its devotees an intelligent interest in golf architecture. The publication of any such article does not imply the approval of its tenets by the Green Committee. The Green Committee does, however, believe in giving its readers the ideas of any sincere student of the game.

PAYING SEED BILLS.—We have recently received a complaint from a seed dealer to the effect that golf clubs, as a rule, are very dilatory in paying their seed bills. This seedsman expresses the opinion that the high cost of seeds to golf clubs is partly due to slow pay. If this be true, then every golf club ought to be able to get a discount on a C. O. D. basis. The matter is certainly worth the consideration of the manager or chairman of the green committee of every golf club.
